WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

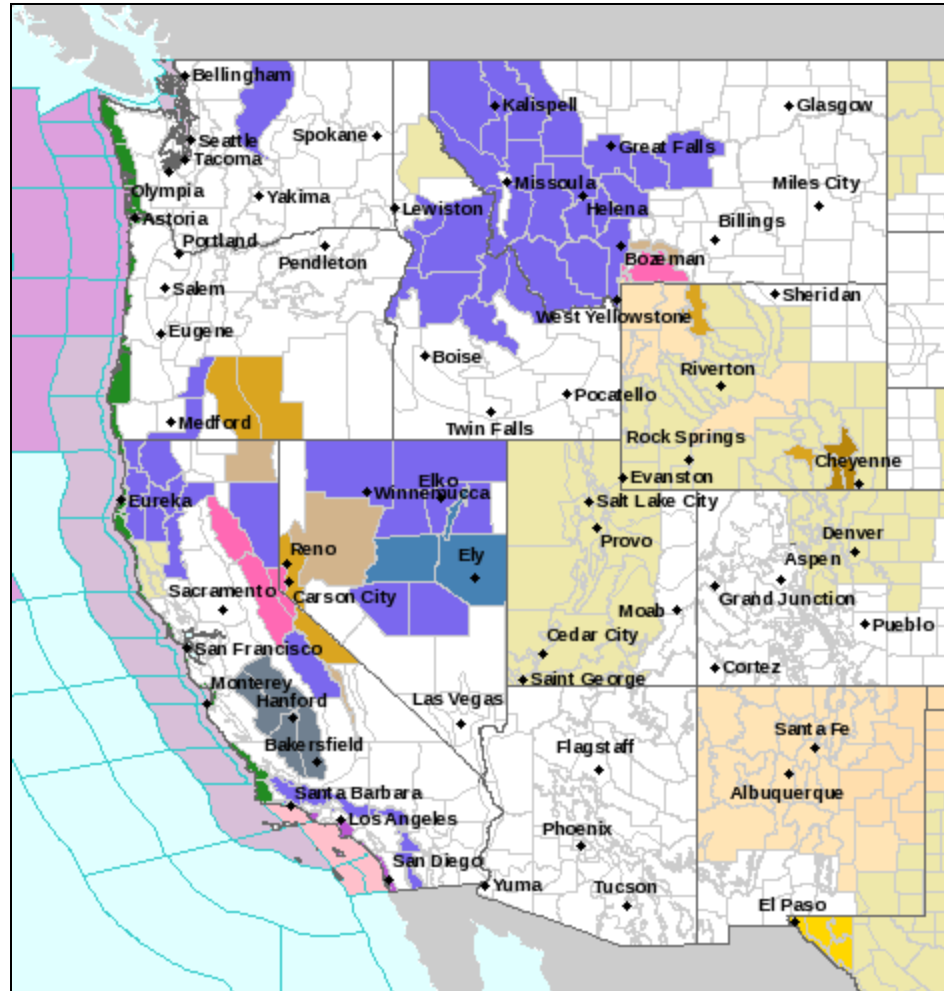

Unsettled weather will continue well into next week. The second in a series of Pacific systems will spread south and eastward today. This system will be a wetter one in terms of liquid water values compared to the previous Sunday night one. Snow accumulation levels will initially be high, generally above 7000 feet, but drop rapidly tonight into Friday when the main trough and cold front swings through. Snow accumulation levels then, will range from near 2500 feet in the north to near 3500 feet in the south. Liquid water amounts between 2.5 to 4.5 inches will be found across the North Coast, Northwest Mountains and west slopes of the Cascade and Sierras during this wetting event. The Sacramento Valley will experience the least amount of rainfall with around a tenth of an inch in areas. Temperatures will trend below normal and gusty southerly winds will increase Wednesday across the north and peak Thursday across the east. Gusts to 50 mph and even higher will be routine across the high country with lesser speeds lower in elevation.

Residual light showers will be found over the region Saturday before the third system begins to swing in Sunday with lasting effects into Monday. The third system will be just as cold and keep temperatures below normal. Snow levels will also be on the lower side. The fourth system is expected to affect the area during the latter half of next week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

There will be little change in the weather through today as weak high pressure remains over Central and Southern California. Maximum temperatures will be 5 to 10 degrees above normal, with mid 50s to mid 60s across the mountains and upper 60s and 70s in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be between 20% and 40% and winds will be light. A Pacific trough from the Gulf of Alaska will bring scattered showers tonight through tomorrow night. Most locations will receive less than a quarter inch of rainfall, but the Central Sierra and its associated foothills will receive between 1 and 2 inches of rainfall. The snow level will start at around 7,000 feet tonight and drop to around 4,000 feet tomorrow afternoon. Westerly winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph will surface across the mountain ridges and desert passes tonight through tomorrow night. Temperatures will drop 15 to 20 degrees away from the coast tomorrow. A weak ridge of high pressure will build into the region from the Pacific Ocean bringing slow warming and drying this weekend. There will be north winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph across much of Santa Barbara County and the Grapevine Saturday night. Zonal flow will bring near normal temperatures and fairly humid conditions to the region Monday through the middle of next week. Scattered showers with light rainfall totals will be possible from a Monterey/Fresno County line northward Monday through the middle of next week.
